Made Again

Our True Love Story from Online Dating to Military Family Life

Sara is a shy divorced woman who wants to take a chance at finding love. Brad is a world traveler who was a trapeze artist, a commercial diver on oil rigs, and a US Border Patrol agent. In a time before Match.com or Tinder, one internet personal ad brings them together, and Sara's once quiet life will never be the same.

In this memoir, follow the true love story about how "the most interesting man in the world" showed Sara all the adventure that was waiting for her. From their days of online dating to their time as a military family facing a deployment to Afghanistan, Sara and Brad's modern-day love letters show the heartbeat of their relationship as Sara was "made again".

Selling Points: Readers will enjoy the romance of our true love story, but may also relate to our life struggles, as well as gain insight as they read about our time living on the Arizona border with Mexico and later as a military family.

About the Author: Sara grew up in Arizona and always wanted to write. She was the "girl next door" that had read every book in her school library. She finally wrote her first book after marrying Brad, who many people say is literally "the most interesting man in the world" because of all his adventures prior to meeting Sara. They met online in 2001 when internet dating was new to the world. Sara saved all those emails from their online courtship prior to meeting each other in person. Brad had one more interesting adventure after meeting Sara. He joined the US Army at 38 years old. Sara began writing her love story memoir while Brad was deployed to Afghanistan. Sara was a military wife, a caregiver to her disabled parents, and a mother of two young girls at the time. Sara lives in Florida now with her family, including Charlie and Elvis, their dogs.
